

From sliding bars to the module

César Martín Gómez

The building analyzed here was born of very particular circumstances that altogether bore upon its conception, growth, and internal development. As the project text narrates, organizational changes incurred in the company responsible for developing the project, combined with fluctuating market demands, were such that physically separating the different corporate departments would not contribute to the correct functioning of the firm. Of course this would bear upon the design of the internal layout and building services.